@WHRO Public Media

From the Chief Executive Officer

April 22 is Earth Day, and 2020 is the 50th year that our nation has celebrated this day created to increase awareness of environmental issues and bring about changes to protect the earth. At WHRO Public Media, we think every day is a good day to celebrate this great planet and educate others on ways we can all help protect our environment.

For the last three years, WHRO has been incorporating environmental education into the services we provide to schools and to our local community through the Batten Environmental Education Initiative. This all-encompassing initiative supports the development of a wide range of educational products including new digital courses, a student-oriented video series, an animated series for grades 3-5, and new environmental categories in several of our annual student competitions—placing WHRO at the forefront of environmental education in Hampton Roads and throughout the Commonwealth.

I am thrilled to announce that Jane Batten has committed $3 million to WHRO for the creation of the first statewide Environmental Science online and video courses. According to the Virginia Department of Education, the Environmental Science course can count as either an Earth Science or Biology discipline credit toward graduation. Once created, WHRO will distribute these two courses to every public, private, and homeschool student in Virginia free of charge.

There is always more we can learn about protecting our natural resources and we strive to remain a trusted source for sharing this information. Whether it is exploring climate change around the world, or discussing the effects of sea level rise and flooding here at home, our programs like HearSay with Cathy Lewis, NOVA and Nature bring you the latest on these issues. This month is no exception. On WHRO TV15 we'll have two special programs on these topics: Climate Change - The Facts (April 22, 8:00 p.m.) and The Chesapeake Bay Summit 2020 (April 23, 10:00 p.m.), If you'd like even more great environmental programs, check out our online archives at whro.org/digital

Speaking of excitement, I'd like to congratulate the winners of our annual Virginia Media Spelling Bee. Andrew Hoehn, of St. Matthew's School in Virginia Beach, won first place and will be moving on to spell in the national competition. Lauren King, of Peasley Middle School in Gloucester, won second place; and Faith Stumpf, of Berkeley Middle School in Williamsburg, won third place. It was an intense competition at the end with a tough battle among all the finalists. Congratulations to all of the students who won their school's spelling bee and competed in our event. All of you should be extremely proud of your accomplishment!

Lastly, I would like to thank those of you who donated in support of our recent television and radio pledge drives. Without you, none of the work we do would be possible. Thank you for your generosity!

GreenBeats Are On The Street!

Music, environmental education and fun combine in WHRO Public Media's educational series, GreenBeats. Created by the same team that developed the popular HealthBeats series, this animated series promotes environmental education and stewardship.

Targeted toward children in third through fifth grades, the series features fun characters like Recycle Girl and upbeat music with creative lyrics. Each episode helps kids learn to protect the environment by teaching them to recycle, "scoop the poop" to protect our waterways, and avoid straws in their drinks so plastic doesn't end up as debris in the ocean.

The videos are modeled after the popular Schoolhouse Rock! series and directly correlate with different Virginia Standards of Learning. Local songwriter Skye Zentz has helped in the creation of the series. "GreenBeats is talking about owning your own piece of a much bigger puzzle," Zentz said. "How the small steps you can take as one person can really impact your community and the whole planet!"

GreenBeats is a product of the Batten Environmental Education Initiative dedicated to creating environmental awareness and education in the Hampton Roads community. It is just one example of how the station is committed to educating Virginia's environmental stewards of tomorrow.

Highlights of WHRO FM's Ongoing 'Arts Conversations'

Arts Conversations gives you a peek into what makes the arts so vibrant in Hampton Roads. WHRO FM announcers share their conversations with local and visiting conductors, musicians, singers, actors and visual artists, not only keeping you updated on upcoming concerts, but giving you insight into the artists' creative processes.

From Norfolk to the Met: Tenor Frederick Ballentine grew up in Norfolk and attended the Governor's School for the Arts, where he fell in love with opera. This season, he made his debut at The Metropolitan Opera with the role of Sportin' Life in their new production of Gershwin's Porgy and Bess. Frederick spoke with Wayla Chambo about his memories of the Governor's School, his advice for current students, and what it was like making that Met debut.

Andrew Greene of the Peacherine Ragtime Orchestra: Andrew Greene founded the Peacherine Ragtime Orchestra as a student at the University of Maryland in 2010. It's now "the premier American ragtime ensemble" as hailed by the Washington Post. Andrew spoke with Rebecca about the orchestra's recent performance in Kill Devil Hills, how he fell in love with ragtime, and his process for finding antique orchestrations.

Bill Barclay, director of Antony and Cleopatra: Last season, Virginia Arts Festival presented an interpretation of Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra featuring Florent Schmitt's evocative 1920 orchestral score. Dwight Davis spoke with director Bill Barclay about the production.

Violinist Tasmin Little: Virginia Arts Festival gifted us with a set of performances by English classical violinist Tasmin Little last season. Raymond Jones spoke with her about these performances, her recording process, her upcoming retirement, and highlights of her career.

WHAT WE DO

"What do people do with their time?"

That's a question Norfolk's Doug Fraser asks each week in the WHRO podcast series What We Do.

After its first successful season, we are pleased to announce that Doug returns with a second season guaranteed to take listeners and fans of the podcast even deeper into the most interesting passions, hobbies and jobs on the planet.

In season two, Doug will introduce you (through sound) to a National Geographic photographer, a lawyer for one of the most generationally feared organized crime bosses, a cybersecurity expert who moonlights in one of the fastest-growing gaming subcultures called "speedrunning," a man whose quest is to make a college-level education available for the price of a new shirt, and more!

"Doug is a master storyteller," says WHRO Director of Radio and Audience Strategy Chuck Doud. "His magnetic narratives, and ability to bring a multitude of short-form, audio-driven discovery are amongst the best in the country. I cannot wait to share season two of What We Do with our members and supporters."

Look for What We Do to begin streaming April 1 on whro.org/whatwedo iTunes, and wherever you find your favorite podcasts!

8 Reasons Your Company Needs Interns

Local employers gathered recently for "Tap Into a Future Workforce," a forum about how valuable internships are to local companies. The event agenda included comments from Scott Duncan, retired vice president for Capital Group/American Funds and chair of WHRO's board of directors, and Shawn Avery, president and CEO of Hampton Roads Workforce Council. They both spoke to the merits of internships and the positive impact they have on our regional workforce. Attendees also heard from Ryan Kahn, a nationally recognized career coach who partners with job seekers at all levels to make their career dreams a reality.

Kahn has been honored as LinkedIn's "Top Executive Coach" and his company, The Hired Group, has been recognized in Forbes as a "Top 100 Websites For Your Career." Additionally, Kahn was the star of MTV's 20-episode series Hired.

Kahn told the group of Hampton Roads professionals that hiring interns provides many benefits to employers. Below are the top eight that he highlighted.

For more information on establishing internships in your organization, visit our amgrad.whro.org/internships

WHRO Public Media sponsored this event with the Hampton Roads Workforce Council as part of American Graduate: Getting to Work.

By Belinda Elliott
Managing Editor, Dimensions
Belinda.Elliott@whro.org

1 Internships offer an opportunity to test-drive the talent. It will allow both the employer and the intern to evaluate how well they enjoy the work and the working environment.

2 Internships increase productivity. Kahn noted that 92 percent of internships are spent on higher-level responsibilities that contribute to the company. This helps lessen some of the work that falls on current employees.

3 Internships provide low-cost labor. Though Kahn said he is seeing an increase in paid internships, even those bring a cost savings to the company. Many companies use interns as a pipeline of finding future employees, which reduces the cost of recruitment and training.

4 Internships allow companies to gain brand advocates. Interns will tell their friends and family about your company and their experiences there.

5 Internships improve retention rates. Kahn reported that 75 percent of full-time employees who were former interns stayed with the company for one year. After five years, many of them were still with the company because internships build loyalty.

6 Interns bring an enhanced perspective. "Interns are digital natives," Kahn said. They will bring a new perspective and have knowledge of social media and other technology. They can often offer a different view on how a company can promote their products and services.

7 Internships give current employees management practice. As your employees mentor interns, they will be building their leadership skills to become future managers or directors within the company.

8 Internships help to build future employees of the company. Ultimately, this is what internship programs are all about, Kahn said. As employers build relationships with interns, they will establish a pipeline of new talented workers who are already familiar with the company's mission and culture.

WHRO Honors 2020 Young Storytellers

Each year WHRO welcomes some of the area's most creative minds into our studio for the annual Young Storytellers Award Ceremony. Each child is honored at the special reception and recorded in the WHRO television studio reading their winning entry.

A group of dedicated Blue Ribbon Panel judges take on the monumental task of reading and scoring the more than 400 entries WHRO Education receives each year from local students in kindergarten through fifth grade. The stories are judged on creative expression, originality, storytelling, and integration of illustrations. Their stories could have been fact or fiction, poetry or prose. One first-place student is chosen from each grade level in the environmental and non-environmental category.

Through collaboration between students, WHRO's children's services and production departments, and a Regent University animation class, grade level winners will make a green screen recording reading their story and WHRO production will add animation using characters from their stories. The winners of the environmental category work with student animators at Regent University to create animated versions of their winning stories. At the National Education Telecommunications Association (NETA) awards ceremony in February, WRHO Education won the Celebrating Teaching & Learning Category for Recognizing Young Writers.

The animated videos are posted on the WHRO website and are some of WHRO's most watched social media videos this past year.
